SUMMARY*

Disqualifications

The panel concluded that the Federal Election Commission's disqualification of appellant was contrary to law and the Constitution. Appellant had been disqualified for speculated past membership in the criminal street gang, TPR. The Commission acknowledged that the last provable association between him and TPR was "a month ago."

The panel rejected the Commission's argument that review was not timely. The panel observed that review began well within the lawful twelve-hour timeframe and that it was therefore able to proceed to the merits. The panel vacated appellant's disqualification on the grounds that the law did not permit it.
